AIRCRAFT MUSEUM

Blackpool is famous for the Tower, the Pleasure Beach, and the Illuminations, but tucked away at the old airport on Squires Gate is something a bit different. The Spitfire Visitor Centre at Hangar 42 is one of those places that stops people in their tracks, and it's well worth an afternoon of your time.

The building itself is an original 1939 RAF hangar. Walk in and you're met with Spitfires, a Hawker Hurricane, and a fleet of restored RAF vehicles, all being brought back to life using original wartime parts. There's a replica operations room and briefing room recreating a working WW2 fighter squadron. It still smells like aviation oil and feels like stepping back 80 years minus the ration books.

The whole thing grew from a brilliant local story. In 1941, the people of Lytham St Annes raised over £6,500 in the community to fund their very own Spitfire for the war effort one woman even auctioned her diamond earrings! That community spirit is what the centre is built on, and it's still almost entirely run by volunteers who genuinely love what they do.

For just £5 you can sit in a Spitfire cockpit and get your photo taken. For £10 you get a proper ten-minute walkthrough of the instruments and weapons on top of that. Famous aviation pioneer Amy Johnson flew her last mission from this very airfield in 1941, and that's just one of many stories the volunteers will bring to life for you.

When you need a breather, there's a WW2-themed NAAFI Café on site rest your feet, have a brew, and argue about whether you'd have made a decent RAF pilot. Most people decide they'd have probably crashed the thing reversing it out of the hangar.

It's open Saturday to Tuesday, 10am to 4pm, with free parking on site. Book ahead to avoid disappointment and give yourself a good 2-3 hours, because there's a lot more to it than you'd expect.

ST ANNES BEACH HUTS - COLOUR, CHARACTER AND COMMUNITY BY THE SEA

Few sights are more closely associated with St. Anne's than the colourful beach huts along the seafront. Overlooking the beach and the Irish Sea, they have become one of the town's most popular and recognisable attractions.

Inspired by the traditional beach huts that were once a familiar feature of British seaside resorts, the modern huts combine classic charm with modern comforts. They provide a welcoming place for families and friends to relax, enjoy the sea air and take in the wonderful coastal views.

Each beach hut is fully equipped with electricity, a fridge, microwave, kettle, crockery, cutlery, heater, seating for six and access to private toilet facilities, making them a comfortable base for a day by the sea. Available for hire throughout the year, the huts offer visitors a modern take on the traditional British seaside experience.

The huts add colour and character to the promenade throughout the year and have become a favourite subject for photographers and visitors. They also play an important role in attracting tourists to St. Anne's, supporting local cafés, shops and businesses.

For local residents, the beach huts are more than just a visitor attraction. They are a reminder of St Annes' proud seaside heritage and a symbol of the community's connection to the coast.

Whether enjoyed on a sunny summer afternoon or admired during a winter walk along the promenade, the beach huts continue to bring colour, enjoyment and a touch of traditional seaside charm to St Annes, priced on average £105 a day.
